

Trace of Survival II, Volume 1

Several years have passed since the collapse of the society and the economy. Gone were the days of abundant and easily attainable daily living needs, electronic devices, the power grid and millions of automobiles and the fuel to power them. People were now living mostly like the old pioneers along the Trace and the surrounding areas. They work hard and fight for survival. They are still finding new ways to make life livable. In other parts of the country and the world things aren't any better. Family members of residents of the villages in the area have not been heard from for years and some want to find if they still live. Larry and Carter lead an expedition to southern Mississippi to take Pa home. A friend goes with them to look for family and Larry is concerned about his African friends. They will find joy and heartache in their trip and searches. They will make new friends and new family. It is a trip they won't soon forget.
